Lab 12

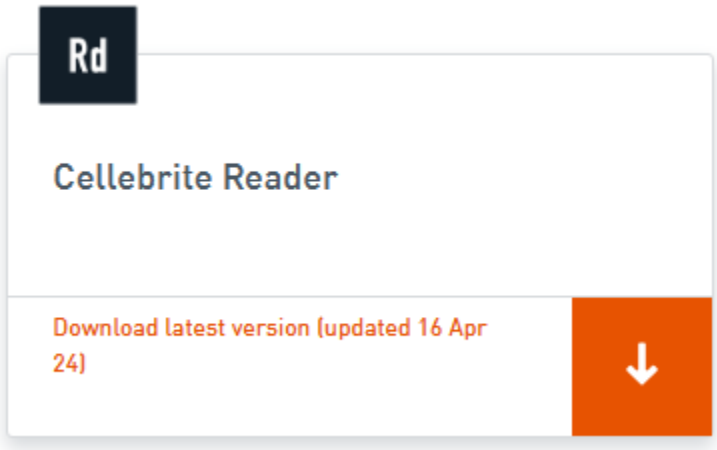
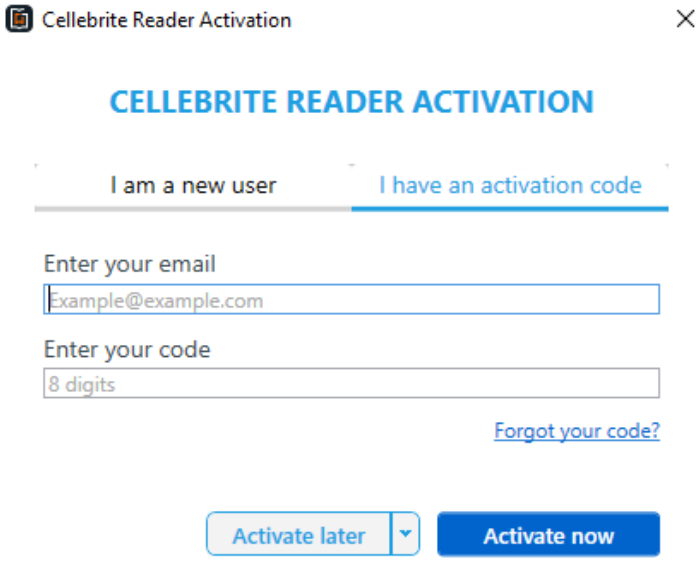
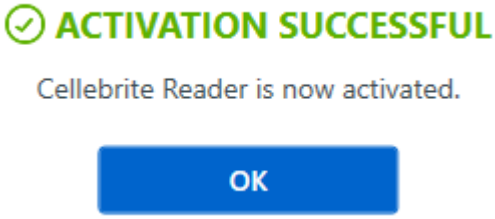
1.



Created an account on cellebrite.com and downloaded the Cellebrite Reader. Extracted and ran the installer.

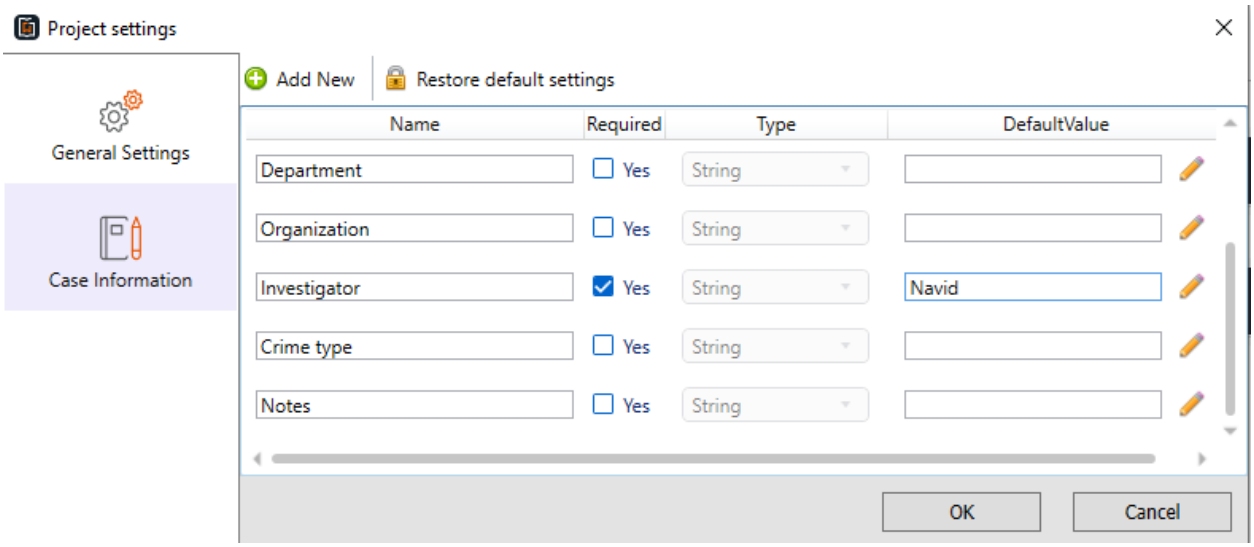
2.





Activated my account using the code I received once I downloaded the software.

3.
Opened the chapter12-Nokia_logical file inside of Cellebrite Reader.



Opened Project Settings, and under Case Information, I checked the Required box for investigator, and put my name for the default value.

4.
These are the extracted contents. Let’s go through some of them.

No event with timestamp to present

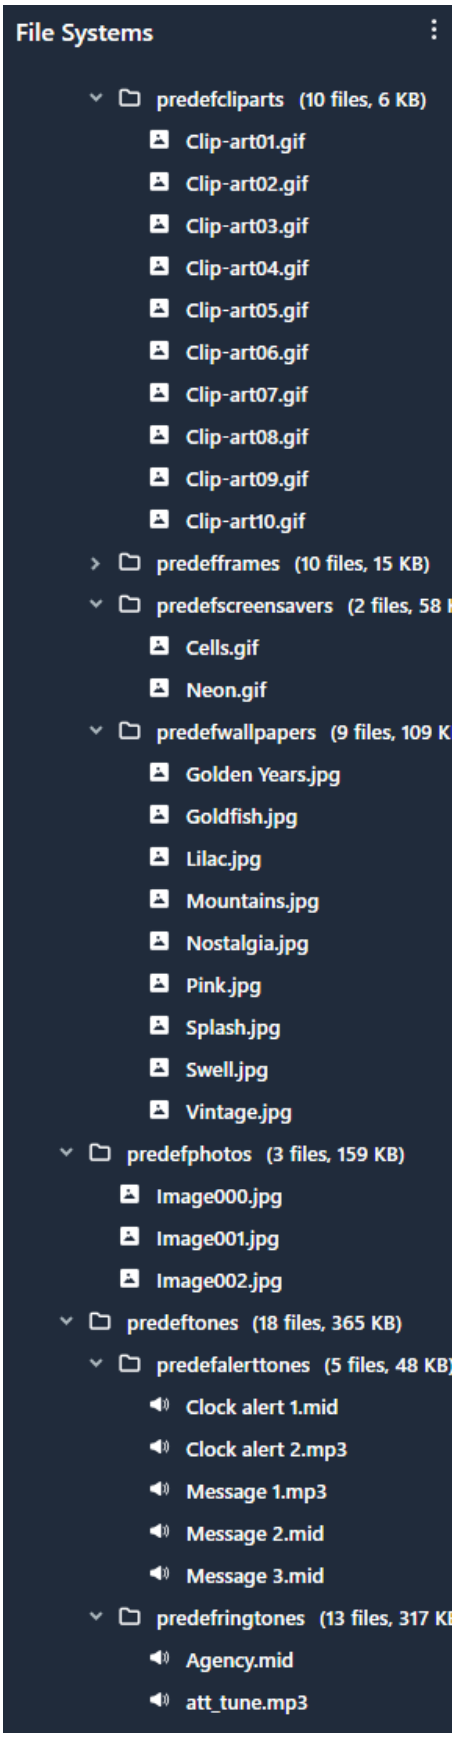
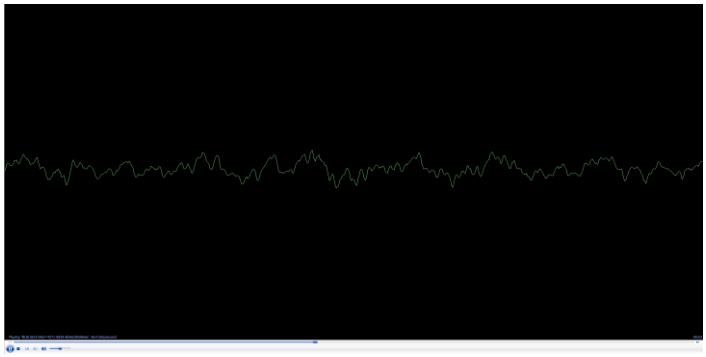
These are the instant message logs. The body shows the texts received. I am not sure if messages sent are also displayed here but I would guess they are even though the “To” column is empty. The timeline is displayed at the top.

Here are all the images. Each one shows the creation date and time on the right. The timeline at the top only spikes on the far left, suggesting all these images were created around the same time.



The file systems page shows several images (consisting of real life images, wallpapers and clip art), gifs, and audio files.



5. REPORT

Call Logs

The device recorded two calls on October 19, 2012. The first was an incoming call from the number +14436946702 at 1:16:01 PM, and the second was an outgoing call to +14437140168, associated with a contact named Dcci Apple, at 1:45:15 PM. Both calls were zero seconds in duration, suggesting they were missed or dropped immediately after connection.

Contacts

Seven contacts are stored on the device, with details including names and associated phone numbers. These contacts include names such as Dcci Apple, Dcci Blackberry, Hoodo Hussein, and others, indicating personal or business relations. The contacts' list seems to represent a mix of personal acquaintances and professional connections.

Instant Messages

The device contains 16 instant messages exchanged with various contacts. Notable among these is a series of messages from and to Dcci Apple on October 19, 2012, discussing casual topics. Earlier messages from October 17 and 18 are mostly automated service messages from AT&T and feedback requests regarding customer service experiences. This suggests the device was used both for personal communication and receiving service updates.

Timeline

The timeline entries match the dates of the instant messages and call logs, providing a chronological view of the device's usage. This includes service messages, personal communication, and call log details, helping to establish a timeline of user interaction with the device.

Multimedia Files

The device stored a total of 18 audio files and 34 images. The audio files include ringtones and alert tones, likely preloaded, while the images include a combination of wallpapers and potentially user-saved photos. The images were created predominantly in 2005, suggesting they are mainly default or preloaded content, with some user photos dated in 2007, indicating personal use.

Interpretation of Device Activities

From the data extracted, it appears the Nokia device was actively used for both personal and service-related communications around late October 2012. The presence of both incoming and outgoing calls and messages, including service-related communications, suggests that the device was primarily used for routine personal communications and responding to service prompts. The zero-duration calls might indicate missed interactions or connection issues at those times. The mix of preloaded and user-generated multimedia content suggests typical use of the device for personal customization and entertainment.
